No. 16 - 92

May 7, 1992

DEAF THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK:

"It is presumed that teaching (deaf) people how to sign will influence speech negatively. Our data does not support this assumption. Yet this assumption still dominates the educational approach of many older teachers and it still inhibits the practice of manual communication in teacher training establishments. Of course the earth is flat - we can believe our eyes, can't we?"

Dr. George Montgomery

2. The child's name.
3. Specific directions for use.
4. The specific name of the drug (not just "antibiotic" or "antihistamine") must either be on the label of the container or a duplicate copy of the prescription accompanying it.

Dear Editor:

The purpose of this letter is to voice what we, the undersigned, believe is a crisis in our deaf educational system.

Many of us are students studying Deaf Culture with goals of becoming educators, interpreters or simply better friends and neighbors. Others are parents of deaf children dealing with this educational crisis on a daily basis. Still others of us are deaf adults, who have dealt with this educational crisis on a daily basis. Still others of us are deaf adults, who have dealt with this educational system and have had to overcome great odds to become well-educated and respected members of communities across the country.

The educational crisis to which we are referring is the lack of qualified interpreters for students in mainstream programs not only throughout the country but also, more specifically, in the state of California. At this time, it is not required that interpreters working in mainstream programs be certified, nor are there adequate testing or evaluation procedures to determine whether interpreters are qualified at all.

Qualified interpreters are an integral part of a deaf student's education and we believe they should be subject to stricter requirements in their education and training. It is not uncommon to hear of a deaf student who went through a mainstream program and never understood what was being shared. It is because the interpreter was not skilled enough in sign language to get the teacher's spoken word across to the deaf student. It is also not uncommon to hear of an interpreter working in a mainstream program after completing only one or two sign language courses. Do you feel that a person with two semesters of French, German, or Spanish would make a qualified foreign language interpreter? We are quite sure that your answer would be a resounding NO!

Many people would say that ensuring the quality of a child's education should be the responsibility of the parents. However, ninety percent of deaf children have hearing parents who are often unaware of and unskilled in the sign language and educational needs of their deaf children. Unfortunately for both parent and child, there is often little or no communication within the home. Parents do not take action to correct this crisis because they are unaware that this is a "gilded age" for mainstreamed students. The child, therefore, is forced to muddle through an education with undeterminable understanding of what is being taught! How long will this continue to be a problem before actions are taken to correct the situation?

How much more suffering must innocent students endure?

While most of us feel that the best learning environment for a deaf student is at a school for the deaf, we know that realistically this is not always possible*. We, therefore, are calling upon the people of this state to stand up and fight for these children. Let it be known that the deaf are not just quiet people who can be easily set aside; they are citizens that deserve and have a right to the same educational opportunities as the rest of the population!

In closing, we would like to add that it is often said, "children are the future." Let us not forget that the deaf children are a part of that future as well.

Students from the Deaf Culture class at Ohlone College, Fremont, CA

Brian Malzkahn, M.A., Instructor

 We are aware that there are many residential schools in other states that are on the brink of being closed down or experiencing a dwindling number in student enrollment. Why? Mainstream programs, in spite of substandard quality and quantity of interpreters, keep students from attending the state schools.*
